Fort Leburg, Trempleway - A good press release starts with a strong lead paragraph. What is the most important thing the reader needs to know? Write 2-3 sentences about the who, what, when, where, and why of your business update here.

The goal of a press release is to generate media coverage and increase visibility for your announcement. Use the next 1-2 paragraphs to discuss the details of the update. Include the context or background, salient data points, numbers, and statistics, as well as any potential implications.

"You can also insert a quote or statement from key stakeholders to add interest and credibility to your press release."

End your press release with either a clear call to action or hyperlinks where readers can learn more about the update.
